JÓLABÓKAFLÓÐ

The Christmas Book Flood is an Icelandic tradition. Every year on Christmas Eve, they give and receive books. Then, they spend the evening reading. What a great Christmas Eve tradition!

Some say this began during World War II, when other imports were hindered but books were still widely available.

Others tie the tradition to the publishing market which waits until right before Christmas to put out its newest releases.

Whichever is true, and there could be truth in both, a Christmas Book Flood is a fun tradition you can begin with your family, friends, or your book club.

With free shipping for certain book selling websites and inexpensive media mail shipping through the post office, even your virtual book club can participate in their own Christmas Book Flood.

FOR READERS ON YOUR LIST

Books are always a great idea, especially if you know their favorite authors or genres. When in doubt, check their bookshelves!

Want to add something extra to the book you bought them? Try these ideas..

Book specific gifts - Choose something that represents the books theme or location.

Reading night gift basket - Add a favorite snack, drink, and a cute pair of socks.

Reading Extras - Add book marks, book lights, and reading journals.

Reading wear - Try reading themed shirts, totes, socks, and scarves.

Reader Trips - Whether it's registration for a reader fair or a trip that includes a special bookstore or book signing by a favorite author, reader trips are great gifts.

Thank you.

May your Christmas be blessed and your year filled with faith-filled stories.

Want to thank an author for a story you
